The perception of the relations and classifications of the subjects were well-nigh perfect. Thought manifestly went hand-irrhand-with memory in their responses. And this from a vice in their responses. And this from a vice well-their teens! It certainly speaks well both for the girls and their teachers, and for the college as well.

On Wednesday evening there was a the first of the new year. Turning a new the first of the new year. Turning the first and for the college as well.

On Wednesday evening there was a meeting of the alumne of the college in the college parlors. Already +96 ladies call the college Alma Mater. Quite a number of these, some of whom are now idooming matrons, were present, and, with the students and their friends, constituted an interesting and brilliant company. If all educated ladies are "blue-tockings" these certainly were neither. ings," these certainly were neither, he in a consistency of the consis

A very noticeable feature was a choice collection of paintings, that have been executed by the students during the past year. Over a quarter of a century's acquaintance with the productions of some of the best painters of this country, and others, including such as Schaeffer, Cole, Bierstadt, &c., ought to prevent undue appreciation; but there was in this collection much to appreciate—much more than was expected, and that which gives high promise of the future. We were particularly pleased with one called, "Byron, the Forbidden," copied from a print, and having an expression far excelling that of the original. "Lost on the Pmiries" attracted much noice, and has some original excellences. The sympathy of the horse with the rider, a thing, that we have seen more manifest in some of the horses of the Plains than ever before in a picture—and more, also, in this picture them the original was a neculiar toward the content was the content was a neculiar toward the content was a neculiar toward the content was a neculiar toward the content was the content was a neculiar toward the content was a neculiar toward the content was the content was a neculiar toward the content to the content was a neculiar toward the content to the picture—and more, also, in this pic-than in the original, was a peculiar

The commencement proper came of the case with the fourth. The building, which is a very large one, was packed to its utmost capacity, with extra seating in all its asiles. But the size of the building presented a somewhat scrious drawback apon the performances. Not one of the lady graduates was heard through the whole house, and most of them by only asmall portion of the audience. It was not altogether the fault of the speakers, or the commencement proper came of the engagement to be broken.

The graduating class consists of nine. Their pieces were all characterized by earnest, practical and polished good sense, indicative, we presume, of the kind of culture imparted and of the spirit inspired by the managers of the college. The music, instrumental and vocal, was by the students, and was evidently highly appreciated by the audience.

President Morton has had charge of the college but a single year, but in that short time his management has given it now life. The number of students has materially increased, the discipline has been im-

The college has a plain, but very commodious, well-furnished, and, withal, imposing brick edifice, situated on a commanding eminence, securing a fine view of the city, of the Ohio river, and of the surrounding country, insuring fresh breezes surrounding country, insuring fresh orests and a healthy atmosphere, and at the same time is very conveniently near the poet office and depots. It has the facilities for imparting every element of culture and every accomplishment desirable in female cation, and, we are satisfied, eminently leserves the high and increasing popular-ty it enjoys. What is the Use of the Democratic Party?

From the Golden Age.

There used to be a ground for supporting the Democratic party; there is such no longer. This party, until the Oil convention, that leading principles of it own, distinct from the central features. From the Golden Are own, distinct from the central features of the Republican platforms. But the Demo-eratic leaders, with the late Mr. Vallan-digham at their head, have solemnly overthrown the tenets which they stoutly maintained throughout the war. Accord-ing to these new-departing statesmen, the Fourteenth and Fitteenth Amendments continued to be unconstitutional long after they had become parts of the very Constitution which they were alleged to continued to be distributed as a state they had become parts of the very Constitution which they were alleged to be violate. But although no change has taken place in these amendments, for they stremain just as they came originally from the hands of the people, yet the Democratic party has put itself into harmony swith a policy which it lately opposed. It mow acknowledges, against its own former witness to the contrary, that these hamendments are valid and regular, and that they are to be as much wobeyed as other parts of the Constitution. Although these amendments have formed the text of several years' unintergularly in Democratic critics, yet these critics now ask to withdraw their criticisms and to a prospective and unmolested dignity as least the concentrate of the Republican party by a prospective and unmolested dignity as parts of the supreme law. The Ohio and other Democratic Conventions practically say this. Now of course we congratu-late our Democratic friends that they are opening their eyes to discern the signs of

But, amid all the joy and rejoicing But, arrid all the joy and rejoicing which we experience over "the new departure," there has departed also the chief distinuishing contention between Democrats and Republicans, namely, the negro question. As a consequence, the ground which many citizens had, or thought they had, for voting against the Republican party, ceases to be valid. The benocrast, having voluntarity absoluted.

Leaving off Tobacco.

People of experience should be allowed their say occasionally. I have had a great deal of experience in leaving off to-bacco, and rather than descant on its injury to the health, or the sinfulness of using it, perhaps it would be better to tell people how to discontinue it. For there are many who would be glad to avoid it who do not know how. I know Dr. Lewis says glibly, "Clean up and quit," and some are rash enough to suppose that a habit engendered in the blood and bone can be laid aside like an old hat. The price of tobacco would fluctuate much more than it does if that were the case. If a man is not sick already, to abstain People of experience should be allowed In ore than it aces it that were the case. If a man is not sick already, to abstain from his usual quid or pipe makes him so. I cannot, in a paragraph, write the confessions of a tobacco maniac, but I am sure inveterate users of the weed would be pitied more than blamed if it was known how, by the cravings of their disorder, they are forced to use what secretly dismost them to make the property can be the case.

year to duit the use of tonaces is in the spring—when some unpleasant symptoms remind one of failing health. Its omission then aggravates the complaints incident to a change of seasons. It tests the nerve of a strong man to go through the multi-plied cares of the growing months with-out his accustomed stimulant, only less necessary to him than air.

out his accustomed stimulant, only less necessary to him than air.

But the golden opportunity, never to be omitted by a wise man who means to control his last days, and intends to die grace-hilly and decently, is when sickness has reduced his flesh and purged his system of one-half its fluids. With convalescence the old induserce will occur to of one-half its fluids. With convaies-cence, the old indulgence will occur to the mind, but the physical demand for tobacco is not urgent, and may be broken if reason does its duty, with comparative
